Keeping your pets safe over the Silly Season

During the hustle and bustle of the festive season, it can be a dangerous and strange time for pets. Their usual home environment is filled with visitors, trees, flowers and other decorations and there are odd noises such as crackers. Therefore we must do what we can to protect them from the hazards of the season.

Food hazards - Chocolate is toxic to all animals because of the coco beans (caffeine) and Theobromine. Even small amounts can cause vomiting and diarrhoea. Toxic amounts can induce hyperactivity, tremors, seizures, respiratory failure and cardiac arrest. Watch out for turkey bones as these can cause choking, constipation or cause damage to your dog's intestines.

Decorations - Clean up Christmas tree needles regularly as they can be sharp and easily get stuck in your pet's paw and throat. Tinsel, ribbon and wrapping paper if consumed can get stuck in intestines, causing serious illness. Baubles can be seen as toys, so use unbreakable ones that are not too small. Protect electrical cords so your pet can't chew them and get electrocuted. Festive plants (holly, mistletoe and lilies) are toxic to cats if ingested.

Furry lumberjack - Make sure your tree is well anchored so your pet can not climb or tip it over.

Remember a pet is for life, so be careful when giving pets as surprise Christmas presents.
